

From: landon kelsey
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 1/14/02 1:30pm
Subject: In a monopoly, there are explicit and implicit acts that are illegal and bad

In a monopoly, there are explicit and implicit acts that are illegal and bad for the USA.

*Explicit acts are those such as the many aggressive acts of conspiracy by Microsoft brought out early in the suit.

*Implicit acts are those such as the inability of small companies to keep up with a company (MS) that can throw 1000 programmers at a project. Norton Antivirus, for example, could be destroyed overnight.

I personally like .NET and C# and it may be the best idea yet, but MS is still not the US National Software Co.

If you don't believe me, look at the service you get from your local telephone company. Many festering sores are left over from a monopoly. A truly putrid bureaucracy left over from a monopoly.

Two types of monopoly...a vertical trust and a horizontal trust
Vertical..example McDonald's could have farms that raise beef and everything else including restaurants

Horizontal...Safeway (unlikely due to inherent poor management) could own every grocery store

Join the world's largest e-mail service with MSN Hotmail.
<http://www.hotmail.com>